Rhode Island
Child Care Is Essential to America’s Economic Recovery

Child Care and COVID-19 Across the U.S.

- Child care is an essential workforce support for parents, as highlighted by the Chamber of Commerce, and critical to ensuring parents can return to work and the economy can begin to recover.

- 64% of surveyed child care providers say they wouldn’t survive a closure of more than one month without significant public investment. At the same time, a majority of providers have been forced to close to protect public health and in response to plummeting enrollment.

- Currently, across all provider types, 60% of programs are fully closed and not providing care to any children.

- As a result, a recent Bipartisan Policy Center survey showed two-thirds of parents who still need child care are having difficulty finding it. Further, about half of parents are concerned their provider would no longer be open when they are able to return to work.

- Nearly half of all child care capacity, 4.5 million child care slots, is at risk of permanently disappearing without significant public investment — before this crisis, about 12 million children under the age of five were in child care.

- As our country moves through the various phases of recovery and reopening the economy, no industry will be able to restart if the child care industry collapses and a big portion of the labor force no longer has access to reliable, high-quality child care they depend on to be able to go to work.

Substantial, direct, and targeted support to child care is critical - and supported by 87% of voters, who are in favor of providing enough federal assistance during this crisis to ensure child care providers are able to make payroll and cover other expenses like rent and utilities. Strong support for funding is bipartisan — 82% of Republicans and 94% of Democrats say they are in support.

A coalition of the nation’s leading early learning and care organizations recently released updated recommendations ahead of the next emergency relief package on the need to provide substantial relief specific to child care.
Child Care and COVID-19 in Rhode Island\textsuperscript{1}

- According to the Center for American Progress, 6,039 licensed child care slots are at risk of disappearing, which represents 24% of licensed child care slots.

- In March, 25 child care providers in Rhode Island responded to a NAEYC survey reporting that 20% would not survive closing for more than two weeks without significant public investment and support that would allow them to compensate and retain staff, pay rent, and cover other fixed costs.

- A second national survey in April of child care providers indicated that nearly 50% of child care programs were completely closed, with another 17% open only for children of essential workers.

- Of providers who are still open, 85% are operating at less than 50% capacity.

- 37% of respondents reported needing to either lay off or furlough employees, or reported being laid off or furloughed themselves. Another 41% anticipated such actions occurring in the next 1-4 weeks.

- Rhode Island received $8.2 million in supplemental funds in the CARES Act to serve the children of front-line and essential workers and support providers yet, we know this is not enough to cover the impacts COVID-19 has had on the child care market and ensure providers will be there when the economy begins to open up. To read more about how your state has allocated its supplemental funding, click here.

\textsuperscript{1} Indicates states with a small sample size of providers. These results should be interpreted with caution.